In an amended complaint filed on Friday in a federal court in Los Angeles, Nestle India, the Indian arm of the Swiss-based international food conglomerate, asked a jury to order the company to pay millions of dollars for misleading consumers into believing its noodles were properly prepared. According to the suit, Maggi noodles are often among the first household products recalled because of E. coli outbreaks, but consumers believe the products are safe because they contain beneficial nutrients. "Nestle has a duty to protect consumers from false and misleading statements of material fact," the suit says. "Nestle's failure to properly advise consumers about the nutritional value of Maggi noodles misled consumers into believing Maggi noodles are a nutritious food, when in fact, they are not."Q: replace the selected record in database by updating its column from another database table I want to replace the selected record in database by updating its column from another table. table1: id p_id 1 A 2 B 3 C table2: id p_id name 1 A name1 2 A name2 sample result: id p_id name 1

Previous studies have demonstrated an increase in IgG in tears of human subjects and a significant correlation between the tear IgG level and disease activity in the rat. These findings suggested that the IgG is involved in the drainage function of the rat lacrimal gland. In this study, the effect of IgG on lacrimal gland function was tested by examining the effect of a locally delivered IgG1 antibody on the rat lacrimal gland. A monoclonal IgG1 antibody was covalently coupled to polylysine and administered into the rat left lacrimal gland by bolus injection. Six days after administration, damage to the gland occurred. This was indicated by a substantial reduction in the total tear volume produced from the gland and the observation of characteristic histopathologic changes in the glandular tissue. A similar degree of damage was not observed with equivalent quantities of polylysine-coupled IgG2a, a control antibody. These studies provide the first in vivo evidence for the involvement of IgG in lacrimal gland function and suggest that IgG-mediated cytotoxicity may contribute to the etiology of some forms of dry eye disease.
