The study of weight restoration in anorexia nervosa (AN) is an important area of research. However, few longitudinal studies are available. Based on the most recent research, preliminary findings are reported here. In order to examine the impact of duration of illness on weight restoration, 52 women with recent-onset AN were followed for periods of up to 4 years. To detect effects of variables such as severity of illness and age, multiple regression was used to examine covariation among variables. The total average of weight change at follow-up from the onset was -11.2 kg; the average gain was 4.4 kg over 5.8 years. From regression analyses, there was a significant effect of duration of illness on weight change: The rate of weight gain was 0.55 kg/month in the first year, 0.25 kg/month in the second year, and -0.07 kg/month in the third year. From the analysis of covariance, the mean weight gain after one year (mean = 6.9 kg) was significantly higher than the mean weight gain after two years (mean = 4.3 kg; $p < 0.05$), but there were no differences between the rates in the third year (mean = -1.5 kg). The study provides a detailed picture of the clinical and functional progression of AN in the natural course, and
