Addictive behaviors often result from plastic changes in brain circuits that normally help regulate how we behave. These processes, which are called learning and memory, occur in many brain areas including the cortex and hippocampus. In the cortex, dopamine neurons are a key part of the brain's reward system. Plasticity in dopamine circuits may underlie the repeated compulsion to feed in some people with compulsive overeating. However, it is not clear whether dopamine is involved in adaptive or maladaptive learning and memory in people with addictive behaviors. Here we report in human and mouse studies that the level of dopamine activity in reward circuits is elevated when addictive behaviors are self-reinforced. We find that normalizing dopamine transmission in the nucleus accumbens prevents and reverses the maladaptive overtraining of behaviors associated with addictive-like behavior. We also find that the reward-related activity of dopamine neurons is enhanced during overtraining of addictive behaviors in a way that is absent in healthy controls. Finally, we found that elevated levels of dopamine during reward-related learning impair subsequent learning about similar stimuli. Together, these findings show that elevated dopamine activity in reward circuits has a general and long-lasting impact on the experience and learning of addictive behaviors.[Salvage chemotherapy with S-1 in curatively resected rectal cancer: a cooperative study of the Japan Clinical Oncology Group (JCOG)]. Although patients with locally advanced or recurrent rectal cancer are candidates for potentially curative surgery, recurrence is common. High-intensity preoperative therapies might result in downstaging of the disease, thereby making surgery a potentially curative option. This study was designed to clarify the therapeutic role of S-1 (a new oral fluoropyrimidine derivative), a combination of 5-FU and MMC, in the preoperative treatment of curatively resected rectal cancer. The present study was a randomized, multicenter, prospective, clinical trial. In the S-1 arm, S-1 was administered orally at a daily dose of 40 mg/m(2) for 14 days, followed by 7 days of rest, starting 1 week before surgery. In the control arm, intravenous MMC 40 mg/m(2) was administered for 1 day and 5-FU 300 mg/m(2) for 5 days, followed by 7 days rest, starting 1 week before surgery. The regimen was repeated every 4 weeks for 2-3 cycles. In the S-1 arm, 25 patients were entered and 20 patients were treated

Oral Disruption Procedure and Enteral Nutritional Intervention After Intestinal Occlusion. Necrotizing enterocolitis in very low birth weight neonates results in mortality. The intestinal blood supply is dependent on a normal small intestine and transient occlusion of the intestine causes local mucosal damage with secondary necrosis of the bowel wall. This study evaluated the role of oral disruption followed by early enteral feeding in very low birth weight neonates with necrotizing enterocolitis. A retrospective review of neonates with necrotizing enterocolitis at two institutions during an 11-year period was completed. Patient outcomes were analyzed, including feeding tolerance, duration of enteral feeds and length of stay. Sixty-five patients were identified. After patient exclusion criteria were applied, 42 patients were analyzed. There were two treatment groups: (1) early oral disruption and early enteral feeding in patients who tolerated the procedure (n = 28) and (2) early enteral feeding alone in patients who did not tolerate the oral disruption (n = 14). The early enteral feeding group had shorter duration of enteral feeding (55 vs. 144 hours) and decreased length of stay (10 vs. 19 days) compared with the oral disruption and early enteral feeding group (both P In 1933, Topsy made his film debut, appearing in the short film Captain Kidd's Kids.
